Plan Ahead

Most emergency shelters will not accept pets that are not service animals due to health and safety concerns. It's a good idea to have a list of phone numbers and locations that are pet-friendly. Remember to include your friends and family!

- Know which hotels and motels along your escape route accept pets. If you can call ahead, it's a good idea. You can ask if the no pets policy can be waived in the case of an emergency.
- Your pets may be more comfortable together, but you should be prepared to house them separately. Make sure to have a separate kit for each animal.
- Make sure to keep your pet's ID and multiple copies of up-to-date vaccination records with you. Most shelters will require these to reduce the spread of disease.
- Be sure to include your pets in emergency drills. The more often they are included, the more comfortable they will be getting into and travelling in their carriers.
- If your pet is easily upset or has anxiety around travel, it may help to speak with your veterinarian about having a store of emergency sedatives to make the situation less stressful.
- We recommend downloading the Pet First Aid App from the American Red Cross.
